Robyn Mildon appointed to The Benevolent Society's Board of Directors

The Benevolent Society, one of Australia's first charitable organisations, today announced the appointment of Robyn Mildon PhD to its Board of Directors.

Dr Mildon is an internationally recognised figure in the field of research translation and implementation science and program and policy evaluations in health, education and social services. She is the Founding Executive Director of the Centre for Evidence and Implementation, a global social purpose organisation whose work spans across eight countries.

An Adjunct Associate Professor at Monash University, Dr Mildon also holds positions as a Visiting Professor at the Yong Loo Lin School of Medicine, National University of Singapore, Co-Director of the Behavioural and Implementation Science Interventions, National University of Singapore, and Chair of the Evidence and Implementation Summit 2021.

"Robyn's depth of experience, leadership and longstanding focus on using evidence to achieve social impact for children, families and communities, makes her an excellent addition to The Benevolent Society's board," said Tim Beresford, Chair, The Benevolent Society.

I am pleased to welcome her and look forward to her contributions as our organisation continues working towards a just society where all Australians can live their life their way."

Reflecting on her appointment, Dr Mildon said: "The scale and impact of The Benevolent Society's support for people is significant and something I am excited to be a part of.

It's an organisation that helps its clients feel valued, cared for and understood. It advocates for people's needs at multiple levels. I very much value the opportunity to contribute my skill set and energy to this important work."
